

I do NOT support changing the rules for broadcast/media ownership. Currently there is not enough diversity in news and programming. Allowing companies to own even more stations in a market will lead to less diverse information not more. Look at the way Clear Channel conducts its business, basically shutting out any opinion differing from their corporate owner. I live in a fairly large market and broadcast news is pablum. Commercial radio and most print media takes the view of "either your with us or against us" approach. There is little media questioning of the facts given to them. Independent media is few and far between. Leaving it to the market to figure out is the wrong way to go. All most companies want to do is make the most profit they can with no regard to content. Those with the most money will have the voice squashing all others. We, the public, want/need more diverse broadcasting not less. They are the PUBLIC airwaves after all.
